Chatter

First off: a very merry Christmas to all my readers and best wishes for 2025.

All-reader game

I have given up (for the time being) the struggle to set up a new game of By Popular Demand (remind me never to offer to do a quiz) and decided to revert to a game we haven't had for a while: Fictionary Dictionary (also known under other names). It's very simple: you guys write in with made-up definitions for obscure words and everyone votes on the most plausible or entertaining. Details on page 14.

2024 'Zine Poll results

Alex Richardson has reported the results in brief with the full details to be published soon. He used three different methods of evaluating the votes (59 people voted this year) and combined the results of all three to give the final standings.

Top of the table (again) is Colin Bruce's Fury of the Northmen, a paper-only 'zine that I see (and am currently playing Civilization in). Colin does a careful job adjudicating his games and produces an entertaining little 'zine, so well-deserved congratulations to him.

Second place went to In Off the Post, which I assume is a football games 'zine, and third was Variable Pig in its last year of publication. (It's been sort-of continued in The Celestial Dragon, which placed 9th after just a few issues.)

To Win Just Once came in 11th, one place up from last year, and as far as I know is the only 'zine running an En Garde! game. Thanks to those of you who voted and the rest of you should vote next year!

Advent beer

This year's beer advent calendar comes from Beer52 (beer52.com), which is all about craft beers and runs a "Beer Discovery Club" with monthly deliveries of selected craft beers. I'm tempted...

Anyway, I'm over halfway through this year's selection and can report that "hazy" beers are the 'in' thing, particularly Hazy IPAs. Three of the first five beers fitted this description, but the frequency calmed down after this. Being contrary, I've particularly enjoyed the dark beers. Here are the highlights so far.

The "Start here" door in the middle hides a glass, which is definitely a good start.

4th December: Strawberry & Peach, a Modern Sour Beer (4.3% alcohol-by volume) from Vault City (vaultcity.co.uk). This was a pinkish, fizzy drink with no discernible beer. I got a strong taste of peach with a hint of strawberry and it was slightly sour (though not the mouth-puckering tartness I've had from some continental sour beers), effectively disguising the alcohol content. It was quite refreshing, but not something I'd describe as beer.

8th December: Sötma, a Robust Stout (5.5% abv) from Vanvåg Artisan Ales (no obvious website). It's dark brown, of course, with a bit of a head and an appealing roasted aroma. There was lots of this roasted coffee (?) in the taste with some sweetness, but a dry finish. Excellent.

Turquoise (10th in the "For the Love of Hops" series), a New England IPA (5.5%) from the Frontaal Brewing Company (frontaalbrewingcompany.com). It's not billed as hazy, but that's what it is: a hazy, pale yellow IPA. The taste wasn't as powerful – or as hoppy – as the earlier IPAs, but was all the more drinkable for that. I was getting definite "tropical fruits" in the taste, too. Very quaffable.

11th: Moorings, a Robust Stout (6.4%) from Attic Brew Co (atticbrew.com). Dark, as you'd expect, with no head. It had a fine nose of rich roastiness and tasted smoky with a lush aftertaste hinting of vanilla – probably the oats in the mix. A fine stout.

14th: Pecan Mud, a Stout (6%) from Omnipollo (omnipollo.com). A properly thick stout with almost no fizz. My first taste gave me a huge hit of chocolate with vanilla overtones. Then I started noticing the nuttiness. Gorgeous. Given the rich taste, I expected oats in the ingredients, but there's also Milk Sugar (whatever that is) and Pecan extract – feels like cheating to put actual nuts in it. Nevertheless, I really enjoyed it – and there's quite a kick from that 6% alcohol.

Spiderwatch

Still quiet on the eight-legged front.

Online stats

TWJO 249 was published right at the end of November (30th) and the PDFs were downloaded 29 times on that day. The previous issue received 396 downloads across the month, making a total of 480 in 1½ months. There were 178 downloads for number 247, taking it to 366 since publication.

Letters

Tim Macaire notes:

Never mind when Mince pies go on sale, my branch of Waitrose is now selling hot cross buns. The only reason I don't denounce them as an attack on the very fabric of our civilization is that they actually taste rather good with lots of butter in front of a fire...

Anathema! Regardless of how good they taste. Andy Kendall remarks, in the middle of Storm Darragh:

Breezy, isn't it?

Well, I've only had to retrieve one bin from the bottom of the garden. Our garden fence did look touch and go for a while, but it survived and has now been strengthened. Mind you, we only had the edge of the storm and I've seen little evidence (the odd fallen branch) of damage on my walks.

Jonathan Palfrey continues last time's discussion.

You comment that Tolkien's wars may be less ugly than Zelazny's because "Tolkien is more clearly fantasy". No, I think the essential difference is that the War of the Ring is a war that's worth fighting. Sauron's victory would be terrible for everyone, so everyone fighting against him has a genuine personal reason to do so. Sauron's use of the orcs is ugly, but well, he's Sauron, he's supposed to be ugly.

Whereas Zelazny's wars (in Lord of Light and the "Amber" series) are merely selfish power struggles among the members of a small elite group. I don't know how they persuade hordes of mere mortals to fight for them, but it must be basically a deception, because whoever wins the war isn't going to make much difference to anyone except to the members of the elite group. That's what's ugly about it.

Agreed on the power struggles amongst the elite, Jonathan, but Sam's fight in Lord of Light is to remove the restrictions the 'Gods' enforce and thus allow humanity to progress. A benefit to all, though how he persuades (non-elite) people to follow him remains a mystery. Jonathan continues with some suggested reading.

Recently I tried a new author, Garth Nix, and his novel The Left-Handed Booksellers of London (2020). It's what I disapprovingly call 'wild fantasy': it puts no limits on what magic can do, so the author is at liberty to invent any kind of magical effect at any time. I prefer fantasy to be more disciplined, to follow rules, to have limits. Also, it's semi-juvenile: the heroine is 18. Despite these drawbacks, it makes a readable enough story; I gave it 3 stars on first reading, and bought the sequel, because it's hard for me to find any new books that are worth even 3 stars to me.

Earlier in November, I tried another new author, Andy Weir, and his novel Project Hail Mary (2021), which is rather unusual these days in being science fiction that is genuinely fiction about science. It reminds me somewhat of Hal Clement's novels from the 1950s: the author is a science enthusiast who expects his readers to be the same, and the hero spends much of his time solving scientific puzzles. The scientific puzzles are a bit over my head, but I gave it 3 stars because there is a story to it, and it's a good enough story. Characterization is minimal: there are few significant characters, and their personalities aren't particularly interesting or important.

Praising with faint damns?

Waterloo at MidCon 2024

Where Pevans is Wellington

The Sunday of this year's MidCon was the scheduled day for a mammoth game of Commands & Colors: Napoleonics. Organised by Mark, this year's game was the battle of Waterloo using the Grand Battles rules. That is, a very wide board and four players per side (British + Allies under Wellington versus Napoleon's French): three Corps commanders, each in charge of two sections of the battlefield, and an overall commander-in-chief. Plus a ninth player, Mark in this case, joining the game to command the Prussians. When they arrive.

I was a little late (ahem) arriving and Mark slapped this down in front of me:

Ah. Where did I put my bicorne? This was actually the first time I'd taken on the role of CinC which meant trying to disengage my tactical brain and look at the overall strategy. As I was sitting at the Hougoumont end (British right flank) of the table, I'm afraid that I concentrated rather more on this. The other end had Mark keeping an eye on things and rolling the dice that would decide when the Prussians arrived. These could also mean that Napoleon was taken ill, leaving command to Marshal Ney and his focus on the cavalry (special rules restrict what the player can do).

Mark (and Marianne) had done the work of setting up the evening before so, after some final set-up and introductions, the game got going at 10. The initiative is definitely with the French – they could do with getting ahead before the Prussians arrive – and initial action was on the flanks with just some artillery exchanges across the valley in the centre. (This provoked some head-scratching as we had three different versions of the effects of the sand quarry in the centre of the Allied line – a Rifle unit is stationed there initially. Mark did some searching online and made a definitive ruling. For this game.)

On the Allied left, my Corps commander inflicted heavy casualties on the French – despite the participation of the Young Guard and (my pet hate) Lancers – but was forced out of Papelotte village (worth victory banners to whoever holds it). On the right, Allied troops moved forward to reinforce the walled farm at Hougoumont (also worth banners), pushing the French attackers back. In the centre, the French artillery proved surprisingly effective, so the infantry backed behind the ridge.

Which is roughly when the cover photo was taken. In the foreground, yellow (Spanish) blocks are being used for some of the Allied troops (Hanoverian and Nassau, apparently) while British (red) Light infantry hold Hougomont. In the centre, much of the British infantry is behind the hills. At the top, you can see several French units reduced to minimum strength. The empty hexes beyond that extend the board even further to give a staging area for the Prussians and the single black marker shows their progress towards arriving. And the score is 3:0 to the Allies.

The terrain hexes, by the way, are models borrowed by Mark from his friend Alan. You don't get stuff like this in the game box! It really adds to the visual impact, so many thanks, Alan.

Fighting continued to be back and forth and concentrated on the flanks, both sides being gradually whittled down. By lunchtime (in the real world!), the board looked much the same, but with slightly fewer units and a lot of damaged ones. The Allies had retaken Papelotte (picture on the previous page) and the score was 7:6 to us.

The other thing I thought significant was that the French had shifted several cavalry units leftwards. This took them from where they had a relatively clear path in front to behind the infantry fighting for Hougomont. It'll take them a while to get into action now, I thought.

Allied right: Hougomont is in the middle (still held by the British Light infantry) and that French cavalry is at the top of the picture

And then the Prussians arrived! Rather earlier than historically. They're the nasty-looking grey units at the side of the board, poised to take out those damaged French units.

A few turns and several eliminated units later and the score is 14:10 to the Allies.

Still the fighting is on the flanks. On their left, the Allies pushed the French well back from Papelotte and troops contested Plancenoit (originally behind the French lines) with what's left of the Young Guard.

On the right, the French cavalry finally arrived (once there weren't so many infantry units in the way) and Hougomont was cleared. And the French centre, led by the Old Guard, finally pushed forward towards La Haye Sainte.

The fight for Plancenoit is at the top, Papelotte is in the centre and there are more Prussians to get onto the battlefield

The last turns saw the French take La Haye Sainte in the centre, but Allied troops are round both their flanks and it's an Allied win 26:23. Phew! That was, as someone said, "the nearest run thing you ever saw in your life!" Finishing just before 5 pm, it was some seven hours of playing time (including lunch break) and I, for one, felt like I'd been concentrating for a long time.

I found it very different being CinC. For a start, there's a desire to micro-manage. To point out to each Corps commander what they should do with the card I've just given them. I think I managed to restrain this. Until the very end, when I couldn't resist directing the Allied cavalry on the right flank! The 'courier rack' mechanism (the CinC plays two cards each turn: one from hand, one from the rack that's available to both sides) makes for some tricky decisions on the combination of cards to play for which sections of the battlefield. And whether to play a card just because it's good for the other side. I did once make the error of playing both cards from hand, but was quickly corrected! And, as CinC, I did miss the cut and thrust of rolling the dice.

The French have taken Hougoumont (bottom - note the markers for infantry in square) and La Haye Sainte (centre), but the final action is taking place around Plancenoit (top)

It was a terrific day's play and a battle that was a good fight all the way through. My team did a sterling job, we had worthy opponents and huge thanks to Mark for setting this up and doing the donkey work (we did all help pack up, you'll be pleased to hear).

Mark organises games like this at several conventions and you can read his report of this game (with lots of better quality photos) on BoardGameGeek: boardgamegeek.com/blogpost/167327

And that concluded my MidCon. Thank yous and goodbyes said, it was an uneventful drive home, despite the satnav's best efforts. Keep an eye on the MidCon website for news of the 2025 event: midcon.org.uk

Reading Matter

I'm still catching up with Claire North's books and the latest I've read is Ithaca, which I found a real departure from her previous stuff. We are back in Ancient Greece for a female angle on the Odyssey. And this is firmly in Homer's world as the Gods and Goddesses are very real – made clear when we discover our narrator is Hera.

It is set in Odysseus's kingdom, Ithaca. It is years since the fall of Troy and most of the Greeks have returned to their homes. Apart from Odysseus and his men. So Penelope, his wife, is ruling in his stead and fending off the suitors who have arrived to woo her (and the throne) on the assumption that Odysseus is dead.

This much we know from the Odyssey, but what North gives us is her imagining of Penelope's story. She is in a precarious position as it's only the uncertainty of her husband's fate that allows her to remain in charge. And Ithaca is not a rich land, so she's being eaten out of house and home by the growing number of suitors, each with their entourage. She's under pressure to choose one of them, any of them, to resolve the uncertainty. However, she is well aware that this will provoke fighting – if not outright war – with the rejected men.

Aided by other womenfolk (remember, the men sailed off to the Trojan war and haven't come back!) and furtive interventions by Hera, Penelope has to find a way through the machinations of the scheming suitors. Without them realising they've been outwitted by a woman. In Homer, of course, Odysseus and Penelope's son, Telemachus, plays a big role in this. Here, he's a rash, inexperienced youth whom Penelope is trying to protect.

Ithaca is an interesting take on Greek legends, but I did feel it dragged on a bit. Possibly because I was waiting for what I assume will be the climax of the story: Odysseus's return. Looks like I'll have to read the rest of the trilogy! The other thing that's noticeable is that every female character was being or had been badly treated by men. Even the Goddesses are oppressed by the Gods – Hera has to operate surreptitiously so that she doesn't attract Zeus's wrath for acting independently. There is the odd decent male character, though, so they're not all bad.

I have not neglected Ben Aaronovitch's "Rivers of London" series, book 8, False Value, being my latest. I've mentioned before Aaronovitch's predilection for geeky cultural references and this book goes deliciously over the top with them. That's because our hero, Peter Grant, has left the Metropolitan Police (has our trainee wizard has caused too many unfortunate incidents?) and is working in security for the Serious Cybernetics Corp. Yes, it's the fiefdom of an American technology billionaire (think Elon Musk et al) who has a thing about Douglas Adams's Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. Everything in the business is a reference to that radio/TV series/book/film (definitely think Elon Musk). Hence, Peter is a Vagon.

Of course, as we quickly discover, Peter's actually working undercover as some serious magical shenanigans is suspected. Involving Ada Lovelace, fairground organs (that's musical devices, not body parts), a computer called Deep Thought (natch) and loads of evil drones. On top of this, Peter's other half, Beverley, is heavily pregnant, so he's got plenty to worry about.

The story is a great romp with a fitting final showdown and I had trouble putting it down. One of the interesting developments in this book is that the Folly (HQ of the Met's wizards; both of them) seems to be more closely integrated into the Metropolitan Police and its modern ways of working. And then there's a mention of the board game Battlestar Galactica. Hands up all those who think Aaronovitch is definitely a gamer! And I'm hanging fire on the next book – I don't want to run out too soon.

Fictionary Dictionary

Past time for a new all-reader game and I'm returning to an old favourite.

This game is open to all readers and I guess most of you will have come across some variation of it. Each issue I will put up a couple of obscure (or not) words. Anybody who wants to participate writes in with a fictional definition for each word. (For example: "Geranium: a ceremonial dagger used by Aztec priests for human sacrifice.") I publish the definitions, anonymously.

All readers (not just those who contributed) vote for their favourite definitions (any vote for yourself will be ignored). Players score points for the number of people who choose their definition. (In other versions of the game, the definitions include the correct one and players get points for spotting it. However, the internet makes this too easy, so I've left this bit out.)

We'll run this for 10 rounds/issues. The winner will be the player with the most points at the end.

The first two words are: Champertry and Imbricate.

Send your made-up definitions to Pevans at 180 Aylsham Drive, UXBRIDGE UB10 8UF or to TWJO@pevans.co.uk by 10th January 2025

The Wizard of Anharitte (Star Trader game 12)

Turn 8

The blockade by MADNESS & MAYHEM suddenly shifted to Mu Herculis where, despite its attempts to evade, Mariner was destroyed. Part of its cargo was salvaged, it is assumed, given planetary Defence Forces here have also been unable to contact the pirates.

Trading was dominated by ROCKET TRADERS this quarter again. Starting with their selling 5 Spice for 7 HTs each at Epsilon Eridani, where SOLAR SPICE & LIQUORS sold 12 Monopoles for 17 HTs apiece using agent Crip's abilities.

ROCKET TRADERS were presumably intending to trade at Mu Herculis, but COSTA NOSTRA COFFEE INC. left without competition, sold 6 Isotopes for 11 HTs each and became Dealers.

At Sigma Draconis ROCKET TRADERS overbid TREKBOER, buying 10 Alloys for 5 HTs each and gaining a Dealership, leaving the bid of 2 ignored. ROCKET TRADERS then bought 5 Isotopes on Contract and sold 10 Monopoles for 15 HTs apiece, to gain yet another market position. TREKBOER sold 5 Spice for 7 HTs each and can count themselves lucky to have done so.

At Beta Hydri ROCKET TRADERS sold 7 Isotopes for 6 HTs each and got a Dealership. COSTA NOSTRA COFFEE INC sold 11 Monopoles for 15 HTs apiece and took a Dealership for themselves. However, ROCKET TRADERS were not finished: they sold 11 Spice at 12 HTs each and gained a Contractorship.

TREKBOER landed a ship on Planet at Tau Ceti, taking OP 19 and buying a large quantity. ORCA was launched at Beta Hydri with A class crew and 6 Cargo Pods.

ROCKET TRADERS loaded Passengers for two spaceports and kept their feelings quiet.

COSTA NOSTRA COFFEE INC Launched their new ship, Chilli Coffee, with A class crew and 6 Cargo Pods.

MADNESS & MAYHEM may be taking comfort from Planetary Defence Forces not intercepting their ships in Mu Herculis System Space, though its luck can't last forever.

SOLAR SPICE & LIQUORS loaded passengers on one ship and launched their Piccolo hull, Sulawesi, while hiring Agent Dragon at Epsilon Eridani and buying 2 more Spice Factories at Sigma Draconis.

OP 19 was taken (from Turn 10) by TREKBOER this turn.

Turn 10 B9, P3
Turn 11 B5

There are two new News chits this turn. The current list (new chits in bold) is:
Turn 9 C4, B10

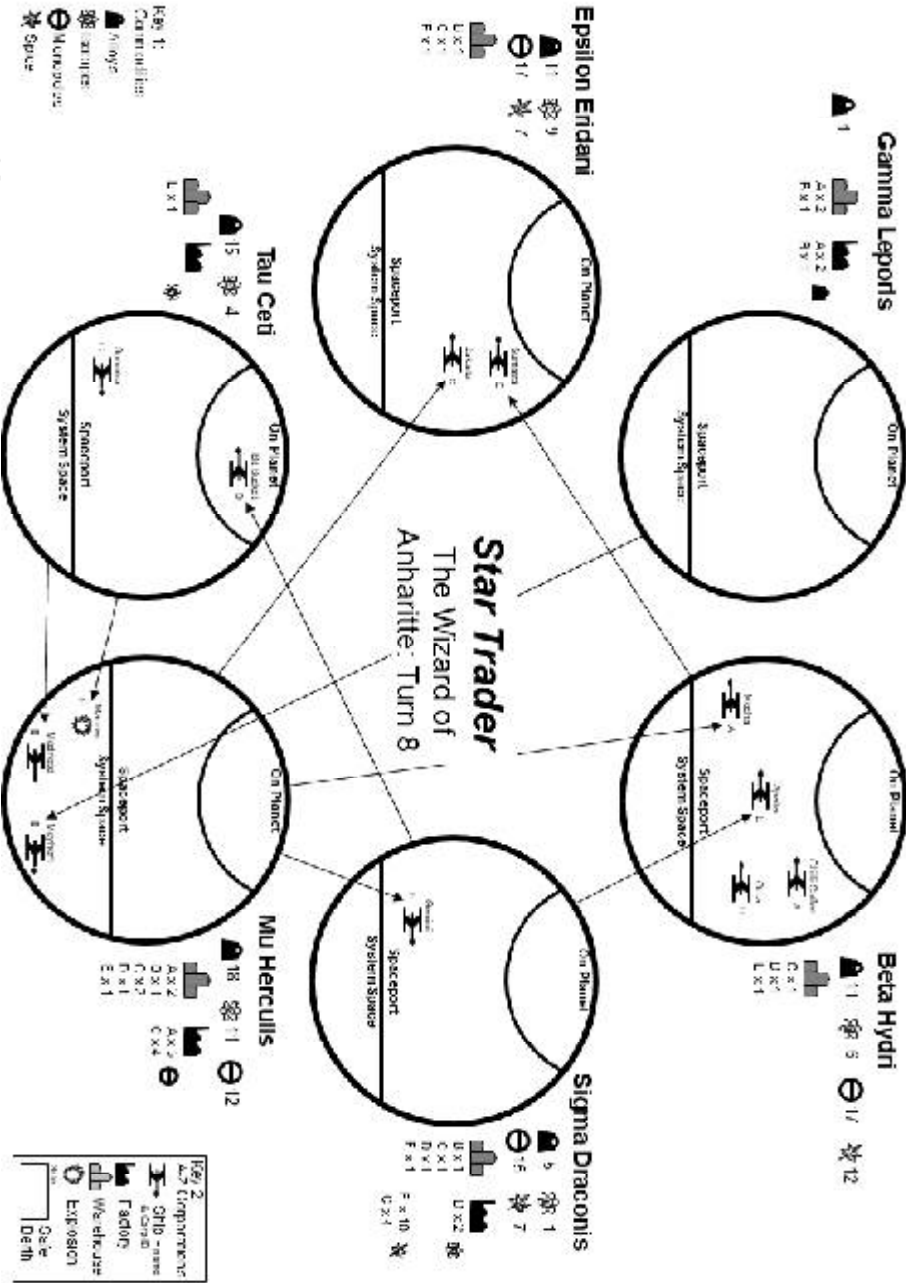

(Chits are identified by the Connection type and level required to see them and disappear/take effect in the News Phase of the turn listed.)

GM Notes

IF you want to take an illegal news chit, such as Slaves, Weapons, or Tempus. you have to land ON PLANET. Being in the Spaceport or System Space doesn't cut it.

When building ships: turn 1 order and lay down a hull in a named shipyard. Turn 2 order and pay for pods and crew (if not done on turn one) and ship launches. You can load it at the end of the turn, but it will not jump until Turn 3.

Hand picked board games since 2004

Caracas

The latest from Corn  can Moorsel: following the lead of 18th century explorer Humboldt, players document the South American landscape and wildlife. By laying tiles. The trick is to match up terrain and provide the environment for the animals.

For 1-5 players, aged 9+, playing time 20-40 minutes: £20.00

Funkenschlag (Power Grid): Outpost

I'm fascinated: the central mechanisms of Power Grid merged with mechanisms and the setting from vintage space game Outpost. So you're building power plants for human colonies on a new planet. With knobs on.

For 2-6 players, aged 12+, playing time 90-120 minutes: £47.00

Keyflower

Not-a new game, but I am so pleased to have this absolute classic back in stock. This is the original from R&D and Huch!

For 2-6 players, aged 12+, playing time 90-120 mins: £40.00

Robo Rally 30th Anniversary Edition

Robots racing around a dangerous factory floor! Players program their robot and then watch it all fall apart. The 30th Anniversary edition has been blinged up and the player count increased to 8. It's still mayhem.

For 2-8 players, aged 12+, playing time 45-90 mins: £100.00

Sail or Die

A card game where players aim to shed their cards. However, this time they start with points and try not to lose them. Though I still don't understand the title.

For 2-5 players, aged 10+, playing time 20 minutes: £16.00

May 1676 (387)

May is the last month before the soldiers leave Paris for the summer campaign. Time, then, for a last visit to their favourite drinking establishments and ladies. Or to make it four months in a row fighting the Dutch and their allies. How many would choose the latter option? We shall see.

First, there are some matters of honour to be settled before Parisians don their uniforms and get down to the serious business of fighting the country's enemies. We start with Claude de Nord, commander of the King's Musketeers, taking on Zeold von Tu, commander of the Cardinal's Guard. Claude has his inappropriate sabre and the greater expertise. Zeold has his expected rapier. First blood goes to Zeold as he lunges past Claude's block. Claude comes back with a slash to even things up. However, Zeold's blow was the start of a furious lunge and his cut is the next hit. A second slash evens things up again and Claude's relative experience lets him strike again with a cut of his own. That's enough for Zeold: he surrenders, conceding the field.

Terence Cuckpowder and Thomas de la Lune have a disagreement to settle with their swords. In Terence's case, this is a sabre, while Thomas has a rapier. Terence also has greater skill. And massive biceps. Not to mention Xavier Ulric Turenne as his second – Jean d'Aubergine backs up Thomas. Thomas watches as Terence goes through several defensive manoeuvres and then hits him with a lunge. Terence replies with a slash and takes a slash from Thomas. Terence's second slash hits hard and is followed by a cut as Thomas recovers his guard. And that's quite a cut! There's a look of surprise on Thomas's face as his lifeless body falls to the ground. It's generally felt that Terence won that one.

Balzac Slapdash and Justin Thyme return us to the regimental quarrels: Dragoon Guard versus Queen's Own Carabinier. Balzac is the man with the rapier, Justin the one with the sabre. This time it's the rapier-wielder who is more skilled, but Justin has Rick Shaw and Xavier in support. The two men attack together, the rapier's lunge deflected by the sabre's slash. Justin is the quicker to follow up and his cut draws a surrender from the Dragoon Guard. After this, Balzac is too injured to meet the other QOC he was due to fight, Yve Stanbul.

Military shenanigans

The question is, is Beau Reese Jean Seine trying to tell Martin de Garnache something? He has requested that the senior Major in the Royal Foot Guards resign. And that's Martin. Who's also Guards Brigade Major. Maybe being absent from the regiment in Brigade HQ is the problem...

Having borrowed a bit of money, new boy Cock à Trice applies to the 27th Musketeers. He's turned down, which rather puts a damper on his month.

The 53rd Fusiliers receive an application from the fresh face of Louis Travers, but CO Armand Alsace rejects it. Despite this, Louis turns up at the barracks several times through the month, offering to sweep the yard, muck out the horses, join in fusil drill and generally work with the Privates.

Chemin de Fer is out of luck with his application as well. He goes for the Royal Marines, but they don't want him. His month is spent twiddling his thumbs.

New arrival Max De Pay is better organised: he borrows some cash and is signed up for Grand Duke Max's Dragoons by Louis Severin Descartes. He buys the rank of Subaltern, along with the obligatory horse.

Zeold von Tu commands the Cardinal's Guard and, in this role, allows "Tiny" Thierry Toothpick to join their august ranks. Despite the bailiffs forcibly recovering his debts to the moneylenders (with double interest), the little man is able to buy his way to Major in his new regiment. He refuses Maurice Danseur's request for a loan, instead giving him several hundred crowns. And remembers to pay his Tangerine entourage.

M Danseur is new to Paris and doesn't bother joining a regiment, despite that funding from Thierry. This is a shame as Louis Severin Descartes offers to make him his Aide, apparently assuming that Maurice is joining the GDMD as well.

Maurice's reluctance may be because he knows Louis is about to volunteer the regiment for active service in advance of the summer campaign. This certainly takes his officers (Lieutenant-Colonel Alvin Charles, Major Elroi le Flingue, Captain Grenville d'Arkrite and Subaltern Max De Pay) by surprise – they all had other plans for the month.

Louis SD isn't finished yet. Together with Zeold von Tu, he persuades the commander of Princess Louisa's Light Dragoons to make it both regiments of Dragoons going into action. "Wouldn't it be amazing if the whole Dragoon Brigade rides out... Together... Like in the old days," he sighs, nostalgically. PLLD Major Charles PiedLuminaire is less happy. And Louis still finds time to invest some cash in "Commerce" stocks while simultaneously appointing himself preferred Arms supplier to the Field Army. The benefit of being Army QMG.

First squadron of the QOCs heads to the war, too, courtesy of its CO, Major Ian Dediette. The reluctant man here is Captain Yve Stanbul.

With General Rick Shaw volunteering for the RNHB, over 25% of Parisian society is out of town this month.

The dice can smell fear...

The depleted numbers mean smaller parties this month. Louis Renault and Maggie Nifisent host one of these (week two in the Fleur). Louis tries his luck at the tables: a win, a loss and a cut at 200 crowns a time leave him down a hundred crowns and a bit shamefaced. Camille de Polignac shows him how it's done with his 600-crown bets. He gets one win, but a string of losses sees him run out of funds after just four bets. In part, that’s because he was already out of pocket from the previous week’s gaming (two wins, two losses and a cut).

Beau Reese Jean Seine (with Justine) is host at the end of the month and attracts a rather larger crowd. This is noteworthy for continuing the spat between new Cardinal’s man Thierry Toothpick and Musketeer Claude de Nord. This time, however, Thierry has the support of his CO, Zeold von Tu.

Another event of note is Hector William Booth standing around outside Bothwell’s for half the month, apparently unaware that his expected host, Alvin Charles, is in action.

When it comes to courting, Maurice Danseur’s persistence is an example to us all. Shame it doesn’t pay off, despite the “book of sonnets of Élisabeth Sophie Chéron.” Terence Cuckpowder flits from doorstep to doorstep and is completely confused one week when he can’t remember the name of the woman he wants to visit. All in all, it’s a catalogue of failures this month – unless your name is Beau. Clearly the “flowers and a caged songbird” worked for Lt-Col Nidle. And Seine is Minister of State.

For a week Paris resounds to the cries of “Tiny” Thierry Toothpick and his Tangerine entourage. They parade around the city carrying banners calling for Toothpick to be made Commissioner of Public Safety. They make several passes in front of the King’s Musketeers’ barracks where extra banners decry Claude de Nord as a fool and an imbecile!

Ups and downs – and booty

For the last month of Spring, the Frontier regiments keeping the Dutch busy are joined by lots of cavalry. And the First Foot Brigade. Neither regiment in the Brigade does well and Percival Puffington, leading the Picardies, survives handily. All kudos goes to Brigadier Henri DuShite. His personal bravery earns him a Mention in Despatches and he collects almost fifteen hundred crowns worth of loot.

In the half of the Heavy Brigade that’s in action, there are promotions all round. Brigadier Ben e’Volence is brevetted to Lieutenant-General and takes over the vacant command of the Cavalry Division. He is Mentioned (“A fine display by the heavy horse”) and takes the best part of two thousand crowns as his share of the booty. The same amount goes to his Brigade Major, Stephane Etrange, whose promotion takes him to brevet Brigadier-General. Lt-Colonel Hugh Jeneaux, who commands the Archduke Leopold Cuirassiers, becomes Colonel of the regiment. The Cuirassiers overrun the supply train trying to relieve a Dutch fortress, which is why there's so much to plunder. Col Jeneaux gets even more than the Brigade officers.

The two Dragoon regiments are in action, too, but separately. There's a brief Mention in Despatches for Major Charles PiedLuminaire in Princess Louisa's ("Jolly good show").

Grand Duke Max's get into a serious fight with Spanish cavalry that leaves both sides badly battered. It's the Spaniards who retreat, leaving the French horsemen to scavenge the field. A Mention for regimental CO Louis Severin Descartes ("That looks like a win") goes with over fifteen hundred crowns worth of scavenging. Lt-Col Alvin Charles is not so lucky. A Spanish sabre evades his guard and severs an artery. RIP. Major Elroi le Flingue doesn't take risks and only picks up just over five hundred crowns in loot. Captain Grenville d'Arkrite survives when his horse is killed under him. This is worth a brief Mention ("Oops!") and he gathers well over a thousand crowns worth of booty (and a fresh horse). New subaltern Max De Pay is clearly out of his depth and is cut down in the initial exchanges. RIP.

First squadron of the QOCs is attached to Frontier regiment 1. They pitch in to back up the regiment's attack. There are a couple of MiDs for Lt-Colonel Come Asiouar ("That's shown 'em!"), who is Knighted as a result. He amasses nearly two thousand crowns worth of booty. Captain Yve Stanbul still doesn't understand what's happened or what he's doing there. Right up until he's hit by a Dutch musket ball. RIP.

Frontier regiment 3 attacks, but is routed by ferocious Dutch defence. The attached first battalion of the King's Musketeers holds the line. Lt-Col Frank X Change is Mentioned in Despatches ("Way to do it!") and rewarded with the title of Baron. No booty for him, but there is a small gift from his CO. Second squadron of the QOC under (brevet) Major Ian Dediette is also attached and the horsemen stop the Dutch exploiting their advantage. Dediette's rank is made permanent along with a MiD ("That stopped 'em!").

Even the Royal North Highlanders have a rough month, but there's a Mention for General Rick Shaw who's volunteered to command a battalion ("Another moonlighting General").

Personal

I hear the English are now setting fire to themselves and on 26th May 1676, 625 houses went up in flames, a shop that sold paint and oil being the source of the fire. Buildings were blown up to create a fire break and more souls perished in the Southwark fire than the Great Fire of London ten years earlier. Sacré Bleu!

Jerking and juddering along the pot-holed road, a cart passed by the cultivated fields of le Grange-Batelière farm outside the walls of the largest city in the world and continued on, forcing its way through the crowds on the Avenue de Ménilmontant.

As the cart finally reached the first inn in Paris a young man in good quality (but hopelessly unfashionable) clothes hopped down from the back and tossed a few coins to the driver. “Merci, Monsieur Coquin!” the young man called. “I shall seek you out if I have further need of your services.”

“As long as your purse is as fat as your head,” the driver replied with an avaricious grin, “I’m your homme!”

Cock à Trice (for it was none other than he) waved and turned to enter the inn. At last, time to rest for a moment or two and to enjoy some vin, some pain, and some Saint-Marcellin. And, since he has, at last, reached his destination, he treated himself to some saucisson sec.

An hour or so later, having recuperated and revitalised himself, he headed back out into the streets of south-west Paris and resumed his journey towards the centre of the great city.

“Paris!” he cried, “I have entered you! Next, I shall conquer you!”

Although many of the locals turn to look at him, only one chose to respond: “Quel fou!”

Looks like Octo will be fine, having inherited a sugar plantation from a distant relative on his mother's side. "Bon Voyage, Mon ami". Dear fellow, how glad I was to learn of your recent arrival in Paris and I'm sure that you'll do well here. In way of some sound advice, I would caution you in regard to any dealings with those two rogues Claude de Nord and Frank X Change. Both are reckless imbeciles and barely have an ounce of commonsense between them. It is rumoured that they may well be in the employ of the English and, as Deputy Commissioner of Public Safety, I am currently, along with my diligent Team of loyal underlings, investigating several leads with the aim, once I am formally appointed as full CPS, of arresting the pair of them. Do pop along to my Club for some refreshments and we can catch up on old times.

As summer comes, we serve our liege,
Travelling to the Front to besiege
Our enemies: they will not pass.
For the ladies of Paris we will yearn.
Until such time as we return
With memories, we'll raise a glass.
While at the Front we fight and sing,
Long Live France, Long Live The King.
We fight for them come what may.
To those who come and fight with us,
But fall to sword or arquebus,
We remember. 'twas not their day.

Toothpick resigned from the Royal Foot Guard,
Which Regiment next for this known retard?
He tried to join the Musketeers,
He was sent away with a flea in his ear.
In De Nord's defence,
Toothpick's reference
Said, "Of this man stay wide,
'Twould be better if he was fighting for the other side."
So to which Regiment will his next application be sent?
Who will offer a haven,
To a man known so craven?

Cardinal Richelieu is said to have claimed
The pen to be mightier than the sword.
I hold this phrase to be badly framed
And, should I fight, my will

And I will write in blood, I think.

My thanks to the players who've been spreading the word. This has brought in four new players trying out the game and a new subscriber.

A couple of characters ended up doing nothing for a week or two. Their orders for that week were to "do A if X has happened", but didn't say what to do if it hadn't. Oops!

June is the start of a new season. All characters start the month in Paris and all duels must be fought before anyone goes to the front. Any vacant appointments not taken by player characters will be filled by NPCs – unless a post is appointed by a player character, who may order that it is left vacant (if you have an appointment or rank that allows you to appoint any posts, don't forget to check this).

June is the start of the campaign season. All units listed on the "Army Organisation" table will be in action (any volunteers will serve with the Frontier regiments). Characters who are part of one of these units can only avoid active service by resigning from their regiment and/or appointment.

Next turn is the last month characters can make investments for this campaign. The return on investments will be paid at the start of September.

One third of characters are not in the military or new for June. Unlike recent years, this is a big enough proportion that I will run June and July separately. Hence, I just need your June orders for the next deadline.

Welcome

Joining us this turn are: Richard Cronan, Rod MacDonald, Manoj Nair and Andrew Whiteley (returning after a long absence). Welcome (back) to LPBS, gents.

And Jon Dean joins us for next turn. Welcome, Jon, and enjoy the game.
